Apple mac user guide

With the help of security researchers, Apple over the weekend quickly blocked a cyberattack aimed at infecting Mac users with file-encrypting malware known as ransomware. The incident is believed to be the first Apple-focused attack using ransomware, which typically targets computers running Windows. Victims of ransomware are asked to pay a fee, usually in bitcoin, to get access to the decryption key to recover their files. Security company Palo Alto Networks wrote on Sunday that it found the "KeRanger" ransomware wrapped into Transmission, which is a free Mac BitTorrent client. Transmission warned on its website that people who downloaded the 2.90 version of the client "should immediately to the content of the client of the client should immediately that it found the "KeRanger" ransomware wrapped into Transmission, which is a free Mac BitTorrent client. upgrade to 2.92." Sneaking past the Gatekeeper It was unclear how the attackers managed to upload a tampered version of Transmission's official website was compromised and the files were replaced by re-compiled malicious versions, but we can't confirm how this infection occurred," Palo Alto wrote on its blog. The tainted Transmission version was signed with a legitimate Apple developer's certificate. If a Mac user's security settings are set to allow downloads from identified Apple developers, the person may not see a warning from Apple's Gatekeeper that the application could be dangerous. Security researcher Patrick Wardle of Synack has previously disclosed flaws in Gatekeeper that can lead to malicious code being installed from seemingly legitimate sources. Apple revoked the certificate after being notified on Friday, Palo Alto wrote. The company has also updated its XProtect antivirus engine. After it is installed on a system, KeRanger waits three days before connecting to a remote command-and-control server using the Tor system. It is coded to encrypt more than 300 types of files. The ransomware. Antivirus programs often do not catch it since the attackers frequently make modifications to fool security software. The best method is to ensure files are regularly backed up and that the backup system is isolated in a way to protect it from being infected as well. Disturbingly, KeRanger appears to also try to encrypt files on Apple's Time Machine, its consumer backup drive, Palo Alto wrote. Ransomware schemes have been around for more than a decade, but over the last few years have spiked. At first the attacks struck consumer computers, with the aim of extracting a few hundred dollars. But it appears attackers are targeting companies and organizations that may pay a much larger ransom to avoid disruption. Last month, a Los Angeles hospital said it paid a $17,000 ransom after saying it was the quickest, most effective way to restore its systems. The ransomware had affected it electronic medical records. Although Apple's share of the desktop computing market is much lower than Windows, cyberattackers have been showing increasing interest in it. But so far, ransomware hasn't been a problem, although some researchers have created proof-of-concept file-encrypting malware for Macs. Last November, Brazilian security researcher Rafael Salema Marques published a video showing how he coded ransomware for Mac in a couple of a days. He didn't release the source code. Also, OS X security expert Pedro Vilaca posted proof-of-concept code on GitHub for Mac ransomware he wrote, another experiment showing how simple it would be for attackers to target the platform. This article is part of a larger series on CRM.Customer relationship management (CRM) software for Mac users works with native macOS tools, such as Safari, Apple Mail, Contacts, and Calendar. The best CRM systems, however, do more than support Mac's operating system. They streamline sales processes, organize information, and include tools to manage leads or customers. We looked into six CRM providers that work best with Mac and have evaluated them based on features, pricing, ease of use, and benefits. Zoho CRM: Best overall for small businesses that want to easily visualize deals on an iPhone or iPad HubSpot CRM: Great choice for teams that want a free Mac-friendly CRM Gro CRM: Excellent option for small businesses that want to access CRM data across multiple types of Apple devices Insightly: Ideal for Mac users who are looking for a CRM with strong project management capabilities Daylite: Solid choice for businesses that want to use Siri voice commands with their CRM How We Evaluated the Best CRM Providers for Mac Users A CRM that works well with Mac users should be priced fairly, offer a robust set of functional features like reporting and analytics, be easy to set up and operate, and provide a full range of customer support. As part of our evaluation criteria, we considered CRM options that integrate with the Apple productivity tools, such as Calendar, Mail, and Contacts. Based on our evaluation, Zoho CRM is the best overall choice due to its pricing, features, and easy setup. It offers seamless integrations with Apple products and a well-designed mobile iOS app to improve productivity and collaboration. While we ranked Zoho CRM as the best overall CRM for Mac users, different CRM products will be better suited for various small businesses depending on their size, products and services, and overall objectives. Click through the tabs below to learn more about our evaluation criteria. Total costs, along with a variety of pricing options, are typically the most important criteria for any small businesses decision. Therefore, it was the most heavily weighted when reviewing all of the CRM software that works best for Mac users. This criteria looked at free account availability, numerous subscription options, and billing options, we looked at features we consider a necessity for CRM software that uses macOS to operate, including reporting and analytics functions, customizable pipelines, integrations, and mobile (iOS) capabilities. The functions of any application are only as beneficial as they are usable. Therefore, ease of use was analyzed in terms of the expertise needed to integrate it with macOS tools, the skill required to operate the system, and the overall usability. Help and support hold the same weight as the ease of use criteria, and we evaluated it in terms of customer service hours, phone support, live chat support, and email support, and ease of use. *Percentages of overall score Zoho: Best Overall CRM for Mac Users *Pricing is based on a monthly subscription.
